James R. Johnson has just been awarded the Ph.D. degree by Columbia University. His dissertation "Studies in the Early Stained Glass of Chartres Cathedral" was done under the direction of Professor Meyer Schapiro. It has been recommended by Columbia's Department of Fine Arts and Archaeology for the Ansley Award. Each year three outstanding dissertations are chosen from the entire University for publication by the Columbia University Press. Johnson is Associate Curator of Education at The Cleveland Museum of Art at the present time. He was Assistant Professor of Art History at Western Reserve University.
